Project Grant for Individuals, Application

Applicant	Jennifer Avery Williams
Discipline	Literary Arts, Poetry
Address	47 Ives Street, Apt 2, Providence, RI 02906
Email	jennifer.williams@greenridertech.in
Phone	(401) 555-0188
Amount requested	$1,500
Submission date	October 16, 2026

Project Summary

Funds would support the printing and free local distribution of two issues of Thread & Bone, my quarterly poetry zine, and a small reading series at Alchemy Coffee Collective in Fox Point. The grant covers print runs, a modest honorarium for guest readers, and submission fees for the year. The goal is to keep poetry free at the point of contact for a working class neighborhood.

Artist Statement

I am a poet and barista. I treat language as material with weight and texture, and I write about the small ledgers of an ordinary working life. I publish in small magazines, most recently Poetry Northwest, and I believe the work belongs close to the people who live it, on open mic stages and in stapled zines, not only in subscription journals.

Budget

Line	Detail	Amount
Printing	Two zine runs, 60 copies each	$240
Reader honoraria	Four guest poets at $75	$300
Submission fees	Year of magazine submissions	$120
Materials	Layout, staples, supplies	$90
Artist time	Editing and production	$750
	Total request	$1,500

Full Artist Statement and Work Samples

Applicant Jennifer Avery Williams. Discipline Literary Arts, Poetry. Submission date October 16, 2026. This continues the application with the full statement and the list of work samples.

Artist statement

I am a poet and barista. I treat language as material with weight and texture, and I write about the small ledgers of an ordinary working life, the shift, the receipt, the running tallies we keep without meaning to. I publish in small magazines, most recently Poetry Northwest, and I make a quarterly poetry zine called Thread & Bone that sells for a few dollars and gives copies free to first time readers.

My conviction is that the work belongs close to the people who live it, on open mic stages and in stapled zines, not only in subscription journals. This project extends that belief into a funded year, so that a reading and a printed page cost nothing at the door for a working class neighborhood.

Work samples enclosed

Title	Form	Where it has lived
Fox Point Inventory	Poem	Lead poem, zine issue seven
Closing Shift	Poem	Open mic, in revision
What the Tip Jar Knows	Poem	New, unpublished
Two poems	Poems	Poetry Northwest, 2026

Budget Narrative, Timeline, and Certification

Budget narrative

The total request of $1,500 supports free local distribution across the grant year. Every line is modest and tied to a public benefit.

Line	Detail	Amount
Printing	Two zine runs, 60 copies each	$240
Reader honoraria	Four guest poets at $75	$300
Submission fees	A year of magazine submissions	$120
Materials	Layout, staples, supplies	$90
Artist time	Editing and production	$750
Total request		$1,500

Project timeline

A reading roughly once a month at Alchemy Coffee Collective, with two printed editions of the zine in the winter and the fall. Submission fees are drawn as reading windows open. A short final report closes the grant year.

Certification

I certify that the information in this application is true and that grant funds will be used for the described public purpose. Reference on file: Professor Clara Wentworth, Narragansett Bay College, cwentworth@narragansettbay.edu.
