House guidelines

Keep readings to five minutes so everyone gets a turn. Water is at the counter, not on the amp. New readers are especially welcome, and the room is kind. Thread & Bone zines are for sale from the tote for five dollars, exact change loved by the tin.

Free to attend, free to read. Coffee and the good cheap beer are at the counter. Tip your barista.

About the Series and Directions

About the reading

This monthly open mic is a home for poems, prose, and whatever you have been working on. It is run by a working poet and hosted at an independent shop, and it feeds a quarterly poetry zine, Thread & Bone, made a few blocks away.

Stay in touch

The newsletter Marginal Notes carries the dates and a poem worth your minute. Reply any time, the host reads them all.
