Class descriptions

Find the class that fits your morning

- Slow Flow. A gentle, steady practice with time in each pose. A good start to the day or a reset midweek.
- Vinyasa Flow. Breath linked movement at a moderate pace. Builds heat and focus, our busiest morning class.
- Power. A stronger, faster flow for when you want to work. Some prior practice helps here.
- Restore. Slow and supported, with props and long holds. Made for tired weeks and tight shoulders.
- Yin and Candlelight Yin. Floor based, deep stretch held for several minutes. The evening version runs by low light.
- Mobility. Joint by joint work for range and ease, friendly to desk bound bodies.
- Lunch Express. A focused 30 minute flow to break up the work day.
- Community Flow and Workshop. Weekend sessions, all levels, with room to ask questions.

Studio etiquette and what to bring

A calm room for everyone

A few simple habits keep the studio quiet and welcoming. None of this is strict, it just helps the room feel the way it should.

- Arrive five to ten minutes early, especially for the morning flows.
- Phones on silent and left in a cubby, so the room stays unplugged.
- Bare feet on the mat, and street shoes off at the entrance.
- Hydrate before and after, and keep a water bottle nearby.
- Let the teacher know about any injury before class begins.

What we provide

Mats, blocks, straps, and bolsters are available to borrow or rent. If you have your own mat you prefer, bring it along. Props live on the shelf by the back wall, take what you need.

Finding us

We are in the heart of Koreatown, a short walk from the Metro line, with no parking lot of our own. Street parking is easiest in the early morning. The 8:00 AM classes are the calmest way to start a working day.

Location	Koreatown, Los Angeles
Getting here	Walkable from the Metro line
Hours	Early morning through evening, see the schedule

Reserve your mat, bring water, and we will see you on the floor.
