Understanding on the firing

Both sides understand that the three vessels are wood fired in an anagama kiln and that the surfaces come from the fire rather than an applied glaze. The artist has explained that a single firing carries some risk. If the May 2026 firing does not yield three pieces the artist judges fit for the collection, the museum agrees to accept delivery of two pieces in December and the third after the autumn firing, by the end of February 2027, without penalty.

Other terms

The works enter the permanent collection. The museum credits the artist on the label and in collection records.

The artist keeps the right to photograph the works before delivery for her own records and portfolio.

The museum insures the works from the moment of delivery.

Neither side may assign this agreement to another party.
