

The Week

Studio rhythm. Six days making, Sunday off. The shape, not a cage.

M. Farmer
Higashiyama studio

The days have settled into this over the years. Mornings start the same no matter what, walk first, studio second. Firing weeks break the pattern, everything bends around the kiln when it is running.

Day	What it holds
Monday	Up 6, walk the temple path 6:30. Week planning over coffee at 8, look at the deadlines. Studio 8:30 to 5, throwing. Evening, admin and emails.
Tuesday	Yoga 7am at Lotus, Okazaki. Studio 9 to 5, glazing and surface work, the quiet careful day.
Wednesday	Production day, full throwing. Mom calls 6:30 in the evening, ask about the garden and Dad. Light supper.
Thursday	Material prep, clay wedging and glaze batching, the dusty day. Gallery emails in the afternoon, the reminder is set.
Friday	Loose day. Supply runs, deliveries, the odd meeting with a gallery or curator. Inventory check at 4, order before the weekend.
Saturday	Studio morning. Yoga 9am. Afternoon with Ethan, walk, cook, errands. Sometimes kiln watching if a firing is on.
Sunday	Off. Morning walk. Family in Kitayama once a month. Reading, the kiln log, a museum if the mood takes me. Nothing on the calendar by choice.

Recurring reminders live in the calendar: Mon 8am planning, Wed 6:30pm Mom, Thu 2pm gallery mail, Fri 4pm supplies, Sat 8:30am photograph the week's work, 1st of the month invoices, 15th rent. The phone holds the admin so the head can hold the making.