

Tesla Service and Charging Summary

2023 Model Y - household vehicle

Charging (last 90 days)

Metric	Value
Home charging (solar offset)	78 percent of sessions
Supercharger sessions	6
Total energy added	612 kWh
Average efficiency	248 Wh/mi
Estimated fuel savings vs gas	$190

Service History

Date	Service	Notes
2025-10-22	Tire rotation	Even wear, alignment within spec
2025-12-08	Cabin filter replacement	Routine
2026-01-30	Software update 2026.2	Improved trip planner

Upcoming

Next tire rotation due around October 2026. Brake fluid check recommended at the two-year mark. Home charging continues to draw primarily from rooftop solar and Powerwall surplus.

Charging Detail

Home sessions draw from the solar and Powerwall surplus where available, which is why the household charging cost stays low through the sunny months. Supercharger use is limited to longer trips.

Month	Home sessions	Supercharger	Energy added (kWh)
2025-11	9	2	198
2025-12	10	1	206
2026-01	8	2	208

Efficiency Trend

Month	Efficiency (Wh/mi)	Note
2025-11	252	Cooler mornings, cabin preheat
2025-12	250	Short local trips
2026-01	243	Milder, longer highway legs

Tire Wear

Position	Tread (32nds)	Status
Front left	7	Good
Front right	7	Good
Rear left	6	Monitor
Rear right	6	Monitor, rotate in fall

Maintenance Schedule

Interval	Task	Next
Every 10,000 to 12,000 mi	Tire rotation	October 2026
Two years	Brake fluid test	Late 2026
As needed	Cabin filter	On dust or odor
Annual	Winter tire pressure check	November 2026

Warranty and Coverage

The vehicle remains within its basic coverage window. Battery and drive unit coverage runs well beyond the current mileage. Keep service records with the household file for resale and warranty reference.

Efficiency Tips

- Precondition the cabin while still plugged in to protect range.
- Charge from solar and Powerwall surplus during daylight hours.
- Keep tire pressure at the door-jamb specification for best efficiency.
- Use the trip planner on longer drives to minimize Supercharger time.

Household vehicle log. Circle C Ranch.