Action needed before the term ends on November 14, 2026. Review the limits above for your active residential projects, including the Georgetown installation, and confirm any change to your business personal property value before you renew. No lapse in coverage will occur if payment is received by the due date. Please record the renewal in your books once it posts.

What your coverage includes

This section explains, in plain terms, what each part of the policy is designed to do for a residential interior design practice run from a home office and active on client sites. It is a summary only, and the full policy wording governs in the event of a claim.

General liability

Covers third party claims for bodily injury or property damage that arise from your business activities away from your office, such as a visit to the Georgetown townhouse or a vendor showroom. If a client or a passerby is hurt, or a client's property is damaged during a site visit or an installation you oversee, this coverage responds to the cost of defense and any covered settlement, up to the each occurrence limit and subject to the deductible shown.

Professional liability, design errors and omissions

Covers claims that you were negligent in the professional design services you provide, including space planning, material and finish specification, sourcing, and installation oversight. A common example is a client who alleges that a specified material or a measurement led to a costly rework. This coverage is specific to design firms and is the part of the policy most relevant to your day to day work.

Business personal property and samples

Covers the contents you rely on to run the firm, including the material library, the fabric and stone samples, the drafting desk and shelving in your second floor office, and the tablet and laptop you carry on site. Replacement is on a like for like basis up to the limit shown, after the deductible. Keep a current inventory so a claim can be settled quickly.

Your policy this term

The renewal premium reflects a modest seasonal adjustment and no change to your coverage or limits. The breakdown below shows how the annual premium is built, and the components total the renewal premium shown on the first page.

Premium component	Amount
General liability base premium	$980.00
Professional liability endorsement, design errors and omissions	$560.00
Business personal property and samples	$145.00
Policy and filing fee	$57.00
Total annual premium	$1,742.00

Payment options

Pay in full at $1,742.00 on or before November 14, 2026, or in two installments of $871.00, the first due on or before November 14, 2026 and the second sixty days later. Paying in full avoids any installment handling. Your account manager can arrange a recurring draft if you prefer.

Updating your property value

If the value of your material library, samples, or office equipment has grown over the last year, tell your account manager before you renew so the business personal property limit keeps pace. A short note with an updated inventory total is enough to start the change.

Conditions and how to reach us

Your duties after a loss

Report a claim, or a circumstance that could lead to one, as soon as it is practical. Keep any damaged property until it can be inspected, take photographs, and do not admit liability or agree to a settlement on your own. Send any demand, notice, or legal paper you receive to your account manager without delay.

How to report a claim

Contact your account manager during business hours, or use the after hours claim line printed on your wallet card. Have your policy number, the date and place of the event, and a short description ready so the file can be opened the same day.

A few definitions

Term	What it means in this policy
Each occurrence	The most paid for any one event, before the aggregate applies
General aggregate	The most paid for all covered events in the policy term
Deductible	The amount you pay on a covered claim before the policy responds
Endorsement	A written change that adds to or adjusts the base policy

Questions about this renewal should go to your account manager. Please reference policy KC-GL-558014 on all correspondence. Thank you for trusting Keystone with the protection of your practice.
